COURSE DESCRIPTION: This intermediate course provides military lawyers with a full understanding of the role of the Department of Defense in homeland security. Although some instruction is provided in the area of homeland defense, the majority of the course focuses on the military's support to civilian operations, such as domestic emergencies, civil disturbances, disaster relief, and law enforcement. The course will cover the constitutional, statutory, and regulatory bases for military support provided to civilian authorities. Other topics will include crisis management, interagency coordination efforts at the federal and state levels, information operations, and the use of force in domestic operations.
